INTRODUCTION

The City of Boulder Open Space Department (BOSD) has undertaken a year-long survey of public visitation on Open Space Lands. The BOSD visitation study was initiated to meet three objectives:

- To estimate the total number of visitors to the Open Space System between June 1, 1992, and May 31, 1993;
- To describe activity choices, length of stay, party-size and composition, and place-of-residence of Open Space visitors; and
- To test a predictive model using indirect measures. (For more information see the Visitation Study Plan.)

PROBLEM STATEMENT

The BOSD Visitation Study does not attempt to quantify the tremendous amount of information provided by the public in the form of written comments. The Visitor Comment Study was established to capture this information in the form of a usable, interactive database. The unprompted and non-structured comments are made on the back of the survey cards in the limited space provided. While the comments do provide very valuable information, it must be realized that they represent only the persons using the Open Space System choosing to volunteer their comments. Therefore, comments do not represent a sample of all visitors to the Open Space System. It is important to remember this fact when evaluating the findings from this study.

STUDY OBJECTIVE

The objective of the Visitor Comment Study is to record and analyze public comments made between June 1, 1992, and May 31, 1993, in conjunction with the BOSD Visitation Study. Analyzed information will provide Open Space Managers with an effective tool to further enhance their understanding of the public's opinion regarding certain Open Space issues and the complexities of particular neighborhoods. This information may also assist in identifying existing conflicts among recreationalists or between the multiple uses that occur on Open Space. In a limited sense, it provides information about customer service issues as well.

METHODOLOGY

Quantifying comments poses a complex task. In order to create a database in which information can be easily and accurately extracted, all comments must first be coded. Coding comments can be subjective and the original meaning of a comment could be lost. In an effort to create the most accurate database, four individuals were responsible for coding all of the comments. In order to ensure the exact meaning of each comment was preserved, the entire comment was also entered into the database. Microsoft Excel 4.0 software was chosen for the study because it has a larger character capacity than other software. This allows for the whole or most of the comment to be entered. This method creates a usable, consistent database and gives the Open Space Managers the option of reading the public's comments in their entirety. It also provides the possibility of responding if a name, address or phone number was offered.

Comments were coded based on the following criteria:

DATE--ZONE--BOX--PROPERTY NAME--PROPERTY NUMBER--TYPE--ISSUE--SPECIFIC.

Date, zone, and box were used to indicate the date and location of each comment

(see Appendix 1, City of Boulder Open Space System and ten sample zones).

Property name and property number further indicate location of comments and provide compatible information for the G.I.S. lab applications and property database. TYPE, ISSUE, and SPECIFIC were used to define the comment's content (see Appendix 2, Definitions for Comment Database). TYPE refers to the overall theme of a comment. ISSUE refers to the particular issue within the comment type. SPECIFIC describes the respondents feelings about the type of comment and issue they have mentioned. If a comment had more than one major theme, it was entered into the database more than once. Below are some actual examples from the database.

EXAMPLE ONE:

"I am disturbed at the parking restrictions recently imposed on the streets such as Cragmoor. This has the effect of limiting access to these City-maintained trails to only those who can afford to live near the park. Parking should be allowed on public streets everywhere."

EXAMPLE TWO:

"Please have dog owners and horse owners clean up after their animals."

DATA ANALYSIS

There are a number of different ways to manipulate the data depending on what type of information is desired. Comments may be tabulated according to the entire Open Space System or by zones. Tabulating data according to the entire Open Space System is useful in obtaining an overview of certain comment TYPES and

ISSUES. Stratifying comments according to zones provides profiles highlighting what types of comments were made at different zones and helps identify the overall concerns and issues that were common for a particular geographic area.

Comments may also be stratified according to box site or property name giving a much more site specific view of where certain comment TYPES and ISSUES are prevalent. Analyzing the SPECIFIC category seems to be the most useful way to manipulate the database, because it isolates a category of comment TYPES, which then can be stratified by zone or by box site. This type of analysis shows what the public's comments were pertaining to specific issues and locates their occurrence within the Open Space System.

ANALYSIS EXAMPLE

In these examples, all of the dog comments that have been entered into the database to date are analyzed. All of the dog comments are extracted from the main database and included in Appendix 3 for review. Cross-tabulating the database provides all of the information necessary for an in-depth analysis of comments made by the public concerning dogs on Open Space.

In the first example, an overview of the total dog comments made concerning Open Space are illustrated in a cross-tabulation table (See Table 1, p. 6). This information is further illustrated in graph form for visual reference (Refer to Graph 1, p. 7). Specific issues are also isolated for comparison. In this example, Amenity, Clean-up, and Feces comments are presented in a graph to illustrate their relationship (Refer to Graph 2, p. 8).

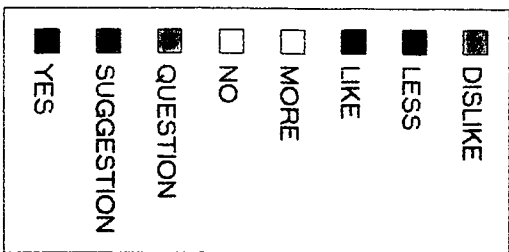

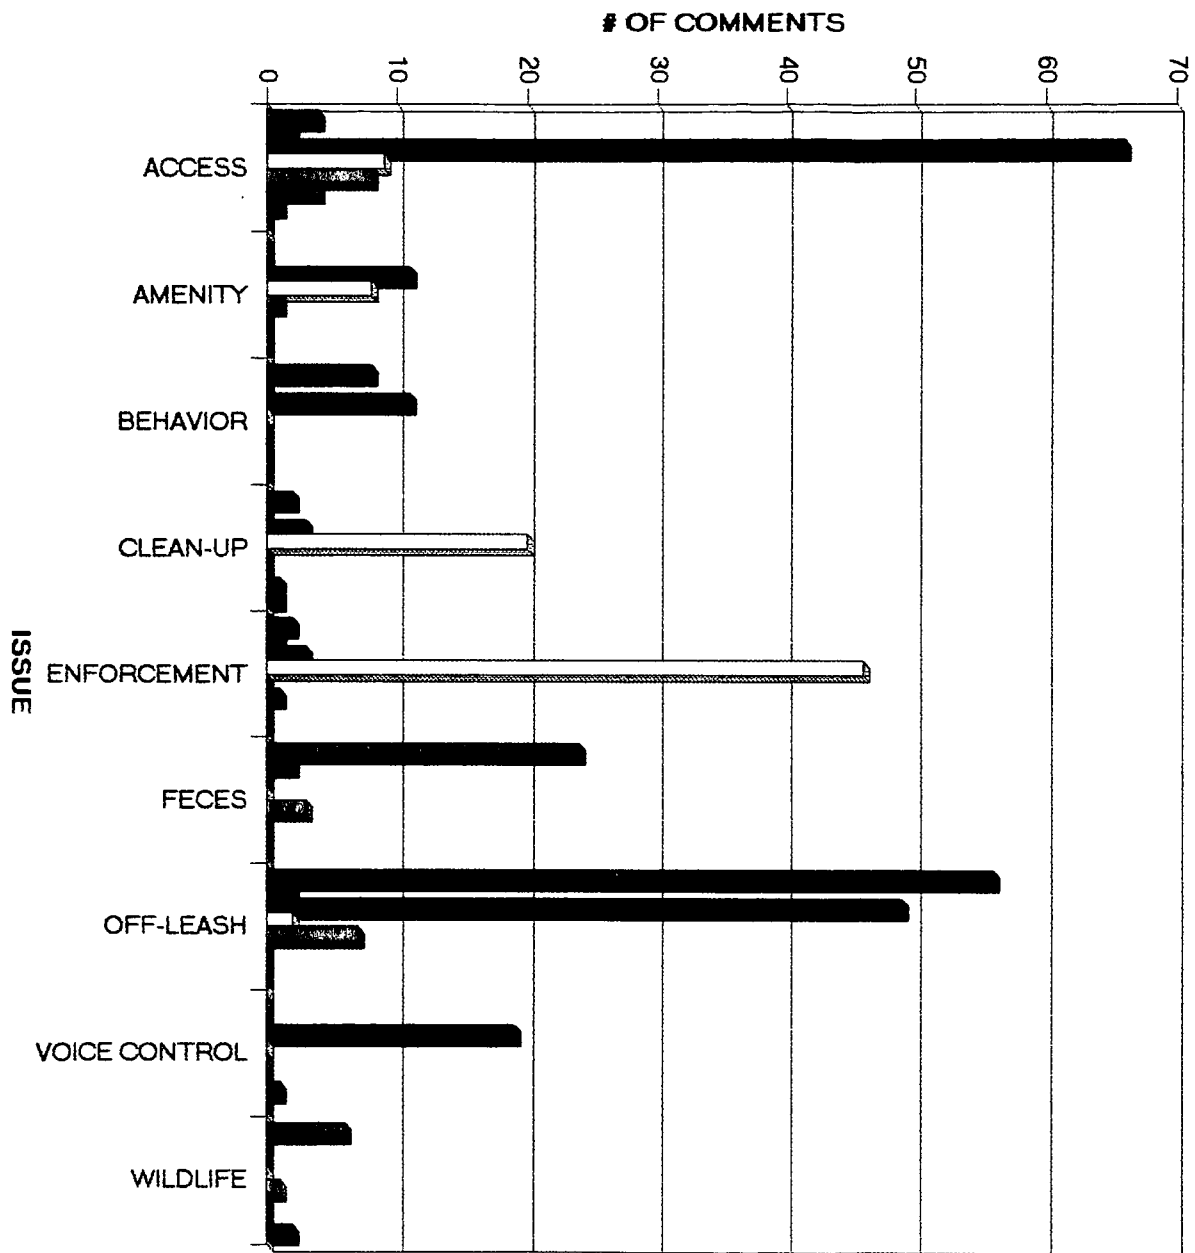

The second example looks at total dog comments for a particular Open Space area, Zone 5 Sanitas. The cross-tabulation table shows the total dog comments made in this area, and what each comment was concerning (See Table 2, p. 9). This information is further illustrated in a graph (Refer to Graph 3, p. 10). Access, Off-Leash, and Voice Control issues are isolated for comparison purposes (Refer to Graph 4, p. 11).

SUMMARY

It is estimated that less than half of the total comments have been entered into the database at this time. Comments will continue to be collected and entered into the database through May 31, 1993. Final analysis of comments will occur in June, with a final report completed by the end of that month.

While evaluating any findings from this report it must be realized that comments represent only the persons using the Open Space System choosing to volunteer their concerns and ideas. Therefore, comments do not represent a sample of all visitors to the Open Space System.
